ONE THOUSAND STREET LIGHTS

How Richmond is Lighted Up From Night to Night.

SYSTEM OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Some of the Old Gas Lights Still in Use-Chief of Police Howard Reports Daily to Superintendent Knowles.

The city of Richmond is lighted by nine hundred and ninety street-lights, and yet the citizens are in the dark in regard to some things.

Richmond is a well-lighted city. The system used in the Light Department is modern in its method and satisfactory in its practical results. Superintendent W. P. Knowles, of the City Gas-Works, whose office is Room No. 9, in the City Hall, has general supervision over the lighting of the city. To him Chief-of-Police Howard makes a daily report of the street lights. If there has been any trouble in any section of the city the remedy, is thorough Mr. Knowles' office Now, Chief Howard does not make a nightly tour over all the city to see that the lights are burning, but his report is made up from the reports of his officers, whose duty it is to notice closely every light on their beats, whether they burn brightly all historical for the results in the results. all night, and if not, so to make his re

Besides the five hundred and twenty-eight are lights in use, there are the city, easting their kind and mellow light in the darkest alleys, three hundred and sixteen of the old gas lights, such as the city used for many years, and one hundred and forty-six "Welsbach" gas lights, which are improvements upon the old-time open-burner lamps, particularly from an economical standpoint.

SAVES MUCH GAS.

The open-burner lamp consumes 25,000 tubic feet of gas per year, while the

The city comes nearer getting her money's worth of light from the electric lights than from the gas, for it is not often a police officer will make errors like a gas-meter. The Light Department has nothing to do with keeping the light is condition. lights in condition. The fourteen men who patrol their circuits, supplying electric lights with new carbon, which is necessary each day, are employed by the Richmond Rallway and Electrical Company, which company holds the con-tract for lighting the city.
